The sun was warm but the wind was chill.
 You know how it is with an April day
 When the sun is out and the wind is still,
 You're one month on in the middle of May.
 But if you so much as dare to speak,
 A cloud comes over the sunlit arch,
 A wind comes off a frozen peak,
 And you're two months back in the middle of March. – Robert Frost

ISD Varsity Boys Basketball - Drew Robarge, our key senior reserve bench player for our 15-7 record (2002-03) team, has been selected as the recipient of the Jim Mills Memorial MVP Athletic and Scholarship Award sponsored by the Kiwanis Club of Indianapolis, Inc. The award was presented by Indiana Governor Frank O'Bannon. Drew will receive a $1,250.00 Scholarship to apply toward college expenses. In addition, ISD received a large traveling plaque to recognize Drew's achievement for our school. The award is presented to the senior high school boys' basketball player, selected from the City of Indianapolis and Marion County High Schools, with the highest academic achievement based on a combination of grade point average, SAT scores, and class rank for their high school career.

Drew, accompanied by his family and head basketball coach, attended the Kiwanis Club of Indianapolis Annual Boys' High School Basketball State Finals Luncheon on March 28th at the Primo South Banquet Hall, south of downtown Indianapolis. Also present were representatives from all of the final 8 eight teams of the 1A, 2A, 3A and 4A classes just one day away from the championship game on Saturday. Special recognition was also given to the top 20 nominations for Basketball Academic All-Star players, the board members of the Indiana High School Athletic Association, and a featured speaker.

This is the first time in ISD history that one of our players has received this extraordinary award. Congratulations to Drew Robarge for his outstanding athletic and academic achievement!

Assessment as Inquiry: Making Assessment Meaningful for Students and Teachers

Are you looking for ways to make assessment meaningful for you and your students? If you are an educator who has moved from a "fact-getting" curriculum to a student-centered curriculum, based on inquiry processes, this session is for you! Learn how you and your students can play an active role in meaningful assessment in order to make informed decisions in the classroom. In this session, participants will:

- ❖ learn about general frameworks for assessment,
- ❖ become familiar with three paradigms for assessment, and
- ❖ develop a framework for inquiry-based assessment in the classroom.

About the Presenter

Kimberly Tyson, the featured presenter, has been a classroom teacher, professor and educational consultant in classrooms ranging from kindergarten to graduate level. Her expertise is in literacy, specifically reading. Kimberly Tyson earned a doctorate from the University of Missouri-Kansas City; honed her testing, diagnosing, and remediation skills while working in a reading clinic; and continues today in a private practice setting. Her experience includes writing classroom curriculum and language arts sections for a standardized testing series. While teaching at the college level, she developed and directed college level Learning Centers that enabled students with learning disabilities to be successful in the college classroom.

Sustained Silent Reading at Jay County High School, IN

by Wood J. Barwick, Principal

Yikes! Our kids aren't reading, and we're letting them get by with it! Everyday, nearly every teacher in our building faces the reality that many members of the class haven't read the assignment. Are they capable of reading it or have they just decided to let it go...again? It's a "Catch-22;" we can't waste the time because there is curriculum to be covered and learning to be insured, but we're certainly not able to use the lesson exactly as planned. What to do?

The first thing we decided to do was simply make sure that every student is given uninterrupted reading time every day to read a personally selected book. We call it sustained silent reading (SSR). For the first 20 minutes of every day, everybody is reading. We permit no intrusions on the time, and we insist that students pick their own books with guidance about reading level from a teacher or librarian. The SSR teacher observes the level of each student's engagement in reading for the day and records that observation numerically; students keep logs of the pages read each day. Students are required to pass two Accelerated Reader tests over the course of the year; most choose to take a test for every book they read. Our next challenge is to keep them reading for pleasure and get them reading for classes too.

In addition to SSR, we are integrating reading strategies across all content areas. The amazing thing about strategies for teaching reading is that they are mostly just like the strategies for teaching content. K-W-L charts, SQ3R processes, and agree/disagree responses can be used to focus students on reading for understanding before, during, and after the reading assignment. Deliberately assigning reading strategies as part of the textbook or other reading assignment will result in better readers who know the subject matter better. Making students responsible for completing anticipation guides and graphic organizers for reading notes and, in addition, regularly requiring written summaries of both content and process will improve student reading skills and obviously content knowledge grows also.

We've decided not to let kids get by without reading. Even though it puts many of us who are not reading teachers in an uncomfortable position, we are teaching ourselves to be reading teachers through professional, peer, and self instruction. You can learn more about our work at our presentation on Monday, April 7, at 1:30 p.m. at the NCA CASI Annual Meeting.

We look forward to continuing the series in the fall. Thanks to everyone who helped make this event a success!

Gallaudet Class - EDU 795/PST 697 is a one-credit, graduate-level course available at JCCC from April 25 - 27, 2003. With increasingly diverse classes, teachers need a variety of strategies to facilitate successful learning in students with wide-ranging abilities, backgrounds, and learning styles. This course will focus on cooperative learning, one of the most successful such strategies. Cooperative learning refers to a method of classroom instruction where students work interdependently in small groups on educational tasks while held individually accountable for their performance. Cooperative learning is effective with preschool through high school students ranging from gifted to mentally retarded, and is applicable to most content areas. Through hands-on cooperative learning experiences, students in the course will learn how to design and implement cooperative learning activities for their own classrooms. They also will develop knowledge of print and web-based resources for further ideas on cooperative learning strategies and activities.

PREREQUISITES: Successful completion of an undergraduate degree. A copy of your transcript must accompany your application to enroll in this class.

INSTRUCTOR: Dr. Thomas Jones, Professor, Gallaudet University

Fire at School for Deaf Kills 28 Boys

By Sergei Rasulov and Nabi Abdullaev
SPECIAL TO THE MOSCOW TIMES

MAKHACHKALA, Dagestan -- A fire roared through a boarding school for the deaf early Thursday, killing 28 little boys as they slept, unable to hear calls of alarm.

Firemen and policemen were able to save 131 of their schoolmates, but 106 of them remained hospitalized Thursday suffering from burns and smoke inhalation, with 22 of them in intensive care wards, local emergency officials said.

The tragedy occurred just three days after a fire at a rural Siberian school took the lives of 22 children, and Prime Minister Mikhail Kasyanov on Thursday ordered an urgent assessment of fire safety in all Russian schools.

Dagestani investigators said they suspected the fire was caused by a short circuit, the same explanation offered by those investigating the fire in the Siberian republic of Sakha.

The latest fire began late Wednesday in the school's assembly hall, adjacent to the main two-story building of yellow limestone bricks, local firemen said. At about 2 a.m. Thursday, perhaps smelling smoke, someone opened the door to the hall, creating a powerful backdraft. Flames surged into the main building and set ablaze the stairs leading to the dormitories on the second floor, the firemen said.

Ramazan Kurbanov, who lives near the school, was among the first who came running. "The corridor on the second floor was on fire and the only way to get the children out was through the windows," he said. "The firemen crews that arrived on the spot had no ladders with them, and we, the neighbors, brought them ours."

The rescue operation was slowed because each child had to be awakened individually because they could not hear the alarms, witnesses said.

"When seemingly all the children had been rescued from several dormitories, someone shouted that some of them could be hiding under beds, and the firemen climbed into the windows again. Indeed, several scared kids were saved then from under the furniture," Kurbanov said.

Girls and boys slept in separate dormitories, which is why the children who died were all boys, most of them among the youngest at the school, emergency officials said. The pupils ranged in age from 7 to 14.

It took three hours for 17 firefighting crews to put out the fire, which was fanned by high winds.

On Thursday morning, thin smoke still swirled from the debris on the school's second floor. Charred children's shoes and boots were scattered across the floor. The ground floor, where the classrooms were located, looked almost intact except for the shattered windows.

Of the school's 220 students, only 159 were sleeping there the night of the fire, Dagestani officials said.

The children's parents rushed to the school Thursday morning. Women sobbed loudly on the street outside, but some of them calmed down when municipal officials standing near the scorched school told them that their children were alive. All surviving children were taken to Makhachkala hospitals, and the officials had lists of who was where. Some of the children were released to their parents on Thursday.

Kasyanov said Thursday that the fire in the Makhachkala school seems to be part of systemic problem.

He ordered the Education Ministry to check all Russian schools for fire safety and the condition of their electrical system. Earlier this week, the ministry told Izvestia that 700 schools had been damaged by fire in 2002.

According to Emergency Situations Ministry figures, 750 Russian children died in fires last year, and not all of them in schools.

Deputy Prosecutor General Sergei Fridinsky traveled to Makhachkala on Thursday to head up the fire investigation.

President Vladimir Putin said the authorities will do everything in their power to help the families of the dead and injured children.

"These are our common children, this is our common tragedy," Putin said in remarks read by an anchor on Channel One television.

State Duma deputies stood in memory of the dead children on Thursday.

"The Americans in these several days lost fewer people [in Iraq,] than we did in two or three days when a total of 50 children died in fires," Deputy Valery Dorogin said, Interfax reported.

A day of mourning was declared in Dagestan on Friday, when the dead children will be buried, Interfax reported, citing the speaker of the republic's parliament, Mukhu Aliyev. Several bodies still needed to be identified, he said.

In Russia, deaf children hid from fire

By Arsen Mollayev, Associated Press, 4/11/2003

AKHACHKALA, Russia -- As wind-whipped flames raced through their southern Russia boarding school yesterday, deaf children cowered under furniture, unable to hear instructions from rescuers going bed-to-bed trying to save them from a fire that killed 28 students.

A total of 106 students from the Republican School for Deaf Children remain hospitalized, with nine of them in serious condition, health officials said.

The blaze came on the heels of a fire that killed 22 students whose wooden schoolhouse burned to the ground in Siberia on Monday. In Moscow, Prime Minister Mikhail Kasyanov ordered an immediate fire safety survey of all Russian schools, particularly in rural areas, in an attempt to prevent more tragedies.

"The country has once again been shaken by tragedy," President Vladimir Putin said in a telegram to the Dagestan region's leader, Magomedali Magomedov, reported the Kremlin press service. "I sincerely share the enormous sorrow that has affected hundreds of people, first of all the parents."

Rescue efforts in yesterday's fire were hampered by the children's inability to hear alarms -- school employees raced through rooms to shake each child awake. When firefighters arrived, they were at a loss to give children evacuation instructions and many children hid under furniture in fear, they said.

"The children did not seem to realize what they were doing," firefighter Ruslan Chupanov told Channel One television.

Rescuers and staff at the 166-student school in the Dagestan region, about 1,000 miles south of Moscow, saved many children by throwing them from second-story windows onto mattresses and other bedding heaved out of the burning school to break their fall, teacher Marzhanat Aliyeva said.

The fire burned mainly in the wing where the youngest boys lived, and all of the victims were boys ages 6 to 14, Aliyeva said.

The Dagestan Health Ministry said the bodies of 25 victims were identified yesterday.

Distraught, sobbing parents and other relatives crowded outside the Makhachkala hospital and near the school, trying to find their children's names on handwritten lists.

Aminat Murtuzaliyeva, from the town of Derbent, said she heard about the fire at her son's school on the radio in the morning. She spent the 90-minute bus ride to Makhachkala fearing the worst, but found her 13-year-old son, Murtuz, in the hospital.

"I am pleased that the doctors have all the necessary medicine and are treating the children well. I only wish they would give us more information on their condition," she said.

Emergency officials said the fire started at about 2 a.m. and may have been caused by a short circuit after electricity was restored to the building following a blackout.

Zoya Darayeva, the principal, told Rossiya television that a night attendant smelled smoke coming from a room but the door was locked. She then saw flames coming from an outlet in a corridor, and thick smoke.

The school staff tried to extinguish the flames themselves, delaying a call to the fire department by at least nine minutes, emergency officials said. High winds also interfered with firefighting efforts.

The brick school building was heavily damaged. All the windows were shattered, and television footage showed charred bed frames and furniture. The walls were blackened.

The fire came three days after a blaze destroyed a wooden schoolhouse in the Siberian region of Yakutia, killing 22 students between the ages of 11 and 18 and injuring at least 10 others.

Prosecutors blamed that blaze on building code violations, which a regional prosecutor said contributed to the high death toll. The violations included a crumbling staircase at the front door and a toilet placed in a fire escape, the ITAR-Tass news agency reported, quoting regional deputy prosecutor Sergei Nemkov.

The State Duma, the lower house of parliament, began its session yesterday with a minute of silence.

Fifty people a day -- 18,000 a year -- die in fires in Russia. Most fires are caused by people smoking while drinking or being careless.

School Fire Kills 28 In Russia

No Warning System For Deaf Students

By Sharon LaFraniere

Washington Post Foreign Service

Friday, April 11, 2003; Page A20

MOSCOW, April 10 -- Twenty-eight boys at a boarding school for the deaf died early this morning when fire swept through the aging facility in southern Russia, officials said. More than 100 other boys were hospitalized for smoke inhalation and burns, 22 of them in critical condition.

There was apparently no system for alerting the deaf children to danger, said Sergei Lupanov, a federal fire official in Moscow. After the fire began, school employees, neighbors and passers-by raced from cot to cot, shaking the students to awaken them.

The blaze in Makhachkala city, capital of the southern republic of Dagestan, provided a snapshot of myriad safety problems that beset Russia 12 years after the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Fire officials said the blaze was caused by an short-circuit, a common event given the faulty wiring in Russia's deteriorating buildings.

Local residents complained that the first fire engine had no water, that the fire ladders were too short to reach the second-floor dormitories and that three of the four ambulances had no oxygen, according to reporters at the newspaper Novoye Delo. Only four adults were on duty to care for 159 children between ages 7 and 14 when the blaze broke out at 2:19 a.m. in the two-story white stone building, according to Sergei Rasulov, a reporter for the newspaper.

Most of the dead were 7-year-olds sleeping in the dormitories closest to the fire, he said.

Oleg Khalilov, the republic's deputy emergency minister, told the ORT television network that the staff member on duty smelled smoke in the corridor and tried to put out the fire herself. By some accounts, nine minutes elapsed before the fire department was called.

Some children cowered under their beds in the darkness and had to be dragged out by rescuers. "Someone realized that they are deaf mutes and couldn't shout," a resident who ran to the school told reporter Rasulov. "Because it was dark, the rescuers couldn't see them. Nobody had flashlights."

Other children crowded by the windows, unable to call for help. "They were just standing there near the windows, not even shouting, just letting out some incoherent sounds," Ruslan Chupanov, deputy fire brigade commander, told the ORT network.

In violation of the fire code, some of the first-floor windows were barred, fire officials said.

Rustam Ismailov, a 23-year-old bystander who was drawn into the rescue effort, said he asked some children how many of them there were. They tried to answer in sign language, repeatedly opening and closing their hands to count by tens or by holding their hands flat at neck level, said Natasha Krainova, another Novoye Delo reporter who interviewed Ismailov.

It was the second calamitous fire at a Russian school this week. On Monday, a teacher and 22 youths ages 11 to 8 died when a fire destroyed a village school in Yakutia, in eastern Siberia.

In that case, the school's front door was unusable because the stairs that led to it had crumbled; two other doors were blocked and a toilet had been built in a fire escape, according to the deputy prosecutor for the region. The wooden school, built in 1927, burned to the ground.

"The education ministry does not have money to repair the schools," said fire official Lupanov. "... The teachers go on strike because they are not paid for months, to say nothing about money for repairs. After 10 years, buildings deteriorate."

Deaths from fire have jumped 160 percent in Russia since 1991, according to Lupanov. An average of 55 Russians a day died in fires last year, many of them homeless or poor people who used space heaters or jury-rigged electrical devices for heat, Lupanov said..

That's more than 10 times the death rate from fires in the United States. An average of 1.3 Americans per 100,000 die in fires every year, compared with 14 Russians, statistics indicate.

Soarin' Hawk Avian Rescue Organization to Come – Soarin' Hawk Avian Rescue is a nonprofit organization dedicated to the rehabilitation and release of injured and orphaned birds of prey (raptors). Laura Edmunds helped to establish Soarin' Hawk Avian Rescue in 1996. She has dedicated her life to birds of prey. Laura doesn't just study and photograph them; she helps to rehabilitate those that are injured and releases them back into the wild. Unfortunately, not all birds can be released. Some are disabled so badly from vehicle accidents, poison, or from being shot or trapped that they could never survive on their own. Some of these birds are used as "educational birds". These birds, which include hawks, eagles, and falcons, accompany Laura on her presentations. During Laura's presentations, she distributes actual wings and claws among the audience for hands-on observation. Laura will visit ISD on Tuesday, April 29th. She will be giving three presentations in the Main Library.

Reminder - Soarin' Hawk Avian Rescue is a nonprofit organization dedicated to the rehabilitation and release of injured and orphaned birds of prey (raptors). Laura Edmunds helped to establish Soarin' Hawk Avian Rescue in 1996. She has dedicated her life to birds of prey. Laura doesn't just study and photograph them, she helps to rehabilitate those that are injured and releases them back into the wild. Unfortunately, not all birds can be released. Some are disabled so badly from vehicle accidents, poison, or from being shot or trapped that they could never survive on their own. Some of these birds are used as 'educational birds'. These birds, which include hawks, eagles, and falcons, accompany Laura on her presentations. During Laura's presentations, she distributes actual wings and claws among the audience for hands-on observation. Laura Edmunds will visit ISD on Tuesday, April 29th. She will be giving three presentations in the Main Library:

8:45 - 9:30	Elementary Department
10:00 - 11:00	Middle School Department
1:30 -2:30	High School Department

Enter the library through the outside back door of the library. Students and staff need to be seated 15 minutes before the start of the program. Each department secretary has two packets of materials that may be copied and used in the classroom. Included with these materials is a list of excellent websites on owls, falcons, and eagles. Some of these sites have webcams - check them out! Information and ideas for activities are also included. The Main Library has a variety of books and a videotape on raptors which may be borrowed.
